7. 90 percent of the indigenous populations: This story is ably told in Jared M. Diamond, Guns, Germs, and Steel: The Fates of Human Societies (New York: W. W. Norton, 1999). The economic historian Brad DeLong has recently appraised the ongoing debate over the merits and limitations of Diamond’s account, proposing that perhaps the better full list of key variables for Western dominance would be “Guns, Germs, Steel, Coal, Slavery, Seaborne Empires, Peninsulas, Mountain Ranges, Rainfall, and Chance,” see: Brad DeLong, “Guns, Germs, Steel, Coal, Slavery, Seaborne Empires, Peninsulas, Mountain Ranges, Rainfall, & Chance:

 14. distributed power: I am painting with a broad brush. The Dutch were repressive and brutal in building their overseas empire, conscripting hundreds of thousands of enslaved laborers to toil on plantations in Indonesia and elsewhere. But it is still true that the Netherlands' domestic governance, compared with other major countries at the time, was distinctive along the lines I have described.
